

"My name is Lily", portrays the struggle of two intersex people to support that their bodies are not defective.

The main character Lily, originally from Belgium is an intersex agronomist, living and working in Cyprus. Lily can't have children, so she decides to go through the process of adoption. Returning back to Belgium to get from her doctor the necessary documents, she witnesses history repeat itself through Ori, an intersex eleven-year-old who's about to have her genitals "fixed" without consent.